Underwriting by CMOS on behalf of ATMOSPHERE-OCEAN

ATMOSPHERE-OCEAN is published on a non-profit basis. An assignment of copyright or a copyright licence is required to allow CMOS to act as steward of the intellectual property contained in the published work, to generate revenue to support publication expenses and to help CMOS deal expeditiously with requests from third parties to reproduce the material. In recognition of the transfer or permission received, CMOS will ensure that proper attribution is given to all the author(s) and their organization in any authorized use or reproduction of the Work, in part or entirety. Authors and their organization retain the right to use and distribute copies of their Work as published, provided they reference publication by CMOS.

Scientific publication entails modifications to the original manuscript; however CMOS warrants that no change will be made without the corresponding author's approval.

¹ If the work was created by an author while he or she was an employee of an institution or corporation, the copyright for the Work may belong to the employer. In such case, option 4(b) will apply and the form must be signed by the employer's authorized officer.

² Certain governments, such as the Canadian and British governments, retain copyright ownership in work created by their employees and do not have a simple mechanism for assigning copyright. In such case, option 4(c) will apply and CMOS will accept a licence from the authorized officer of the government body.
